THE COPYRIGHTING OF YOUR THESIS OR DISSERTATION

THE COPYRIGHT

The following information is offered as a clarification of the information on copyright available in the Doctoral Dissertation Handbook or Master's and Licentiate Thesis Handbook. This information is provided by the Office of the General Counsel (OGC) of The Catholic University of America (CUA).

Copyright privileges vest immediately with the author upon creation of the work, without requirement of notice or registration formalities. Thus, copyright vests with the author of a dissertation or thesis immediately upon creation of the work, and no notice of copyright or formal registration is necessary in order to grant the author of a work the copyright. Students are directed to the article entitled New Media, New Rights, and Your New Dissertation, by Kenneth Crews, available online at <http://www.umi.com/en-US/products/dissertations/copyright/>.

The U.S. Office of Copyright provides extensive information on all aspects of copyright law at the following web site: <http://www.loc.gov/copyright/title17/>. Although the notice of copyright and formal registration is not necessary, we do suggest that authors of theses and dissertations provide such notice.

At CUA, the author places notice of copyright on the title page of the thesis or dissertation. This can be accomplished simply by adding the symbol for copyright, the name of the student, and the year, e.g. “©, Jane Doe 2007” at the bottom of the title page. See the Doctoral Dissertation Handbook or Master's and Licentiate Thesis Handbook for formatting instructions. The date on the title page of the dissertation or thesis is the year in which you graduate and your copyright takes effect.

Students at CUA are advised that copyright applies to all theses and dissertations, symbol or no symbol, and they should consult and follow copyright law when using materials created by others. For information on when use of someone else's material may be used without permission under the “fair use” doctrine see Campus Copyright Rights and Responsibilities, online at http://www.aaupnet.org/images/stories/documents/Campus_Copyright.pdf.

If you decide that the “fair use” doctrine may not apply to your proposed use, then you need to obtain permission from the copyright owner. The Kenneth Crews guide referred to above discusses when permission is needed, and contains a sample permission letter at http://www.umi.com/products_umi/dissertations/copyright/AppxA.html.

REGISTRATION OF YOUR COPYRIGHT

We also recommend registration of copyright with the U.S. Copyright Office. Registration is required before an infringement lawsuit may be filed, and it grants the author the right to receive statutory damages and attorney's fees in an infringement action. When you submit your dissertation online, ProQuest Information and Learning Company can, for an additional fee of $65, file the copyright registration forms for you. By selecting the box titled "File for a new copyright", he/she authorizes ProQuest to register the copyright.

The author may also register the thesis or dissertation copyright directly with the U.S. Copyright Office. If the author selects this option, then they will need to select the box titled "Yes-copyright was previously filed" when submitting their dissertation online with ProQuest. For more information on registering the copyright directly with the U.S. Copyright Office please visit <http://www.copyright.gov/eco/>.

PUBLISHING YOUR DISSERTATION AND YOUR COPYRIGHT

The dissertation publishing agreement which the student signs with ProQuest grants ProQuest the following rights:

- The non-exclusive right to reproduce and distribute the dissertation in and from microform.
- The non-exclusive right to reproduce and distribute the dissertation in and from an electronic format.
- The non-exclusive right to reproduce and distribute the abstract in any format in whole or in part.

What this means is that the student retains ownership of the copyright to the dissertation, and is free to grant the above listed rights to any other party. What the student would not be able to do is grant another party an "exclusive" right to reproduce and publish the dissertation.

THE CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY OF AMERICA AND YOUR COPYRIGHT

The University makes no claims of ownership to the student's dissertation or thesis. As a condition of matriculation, the University reserves the right to make copies of dissertations or theses as needed for the academic or archival purposes of the institution.

Extensive materials on copyright are also available on the Office of General Counsel web page at <http://counsel.cua.edu/copyright/index.cfm>. The Office of General Counsel is also available to answer questions on copyright. The phone number for the Office of General Counsel is 202-319-5142. Questions about the process of submitting the dissertation should be directed to the Office of the Vice Provost and Dean of Graduate Studies at 202-319-5247.
