Introduction

This handbook is written for you, a student in the process of writing a doctoral dissertation, treatise, composition, or evidence-based project in partial fulfillment of the requirements for a doctoral degree from The Catholic University of America. It is the official guide to University requirements governing the submission of your work.<sup>1</sup>

All doctoral degree candidates who are required to submit a formal, written dissertation, treatise, composition, or evidence-based project are required to submit the final approved dissertation to the Office of the Senior Vice Provost for Academic Administration and Dean of Graduate Studies (hereafter the Office of Graduate Studies) for formatting review.

Your dissertation is an important document, both academically and for you personally. For this reason, we expect you to exercise utmost care in the preparation of the final dissertation for submission and we commit ourselves to processing the dissertation for final deposit required for the publication of your work.

To ensure that dissertations from The Catholic University of America reflect the importance we place on them, we require that you follow strict formatting and submission guidelines. Following these guidelines assures compliance with the University-contracted publishing company, ProQuest.

Since you are ultimately and personally responsible for following the guidelines and instructions in this handbook, you are required to read this handbook completely and carefully. University faculty and staff, especially major professors and directors, are encouraged to familiarize themselves with the contents of the handbook as well, since they are often asked to advise students in the preparation of the dissertations.

Certain departments and schools follow procedures and formatting described in style manuals or sheets specific to their individual disciplines, and your department or school may expect you to follow these guidelines as well. However, instructions or formatting guidelines published in this handbook, or in any published addenda to the handbook, take precedence over discipline-specific guidelines.

With the development of new binding and publishing technologies and revised University policies, the guidelines for the preparation and submission of dissertations change from year to year. We therefore advise against referring to previous editions of the handbook or using a previously submitted and published dissertation as a guide for format or layout.

If your research extends over several years, we also ask that you review the most current version of the handbook available on the website of the Office of Graduate Studies prior to preparing your final manuscript for deposit.

Writing Your Dissertation

Style

Please note: The guidelines regarding format and style outlined in this handbook are requirements of the University and supersede any instructions given in the various academic discipline style manuals. For any items not specifically addressed in this handbook, you must refer to your discipline's style manual or consult your department or school.

As stated in the University's Graduate Announcements, "The dissertation must follow the approved format, which conforms to the norms of The Chicago Manual of Style [Chicago: The University of Chicago Press, current edition] (hereafter The Chicago Manual) ... with whatever adaptations are appropriate for the candidate's discipline." You may have some difficulty in consulting The Chicago Manual alone, however. This publication is primarily a guide for editors and typographers preparing typescripts for printing. For easier reference, A Manual for Writers of Term Papers, Theses, and Dissertations by Kate L. Turabian, (Chicago: The University of Chicago Press, current edition), an interpretation of The Chicago Manual, specifically addressing the preparation of academic papers that will remain in typescript form.

In addition to using The Chicago Manual, several academic disciplines have adapted a specific style for use in the professional field for writing journal articles, submitting proposals, etc. You must check with your individual department or school to ascertain if there is a standardized style format for your discipline, or if they have adopted a style format that is standard in another, related discipline. Since these guides are periodically revised and updated, please be sure to consult the most current edition of any manual used.

You must always keep in mind that the guidelines regarding format and style outlined in this handbook are requirements of the University and supersede any instructions given in the various academic discipline style manuals. For example, a running header (as prescribed by APA) is not appropriate for a dissertation, since the header is used for typescripts that may be reprinted in a journal with other dissertations. Likewise, the double-spacing of all text, including quotations (as prescribed by MLA) is not appropriate for a dissertation, since the dissertation submitted to the University will be its final form, and will not be transcribed into another form for further processing.

Your major professor and others in your school or department will assist you in the appropriate interpretation of discipline-specific guidelines within the context of University requirements. When in doubt, contact the Office of Graduate Studies at cua-graduatestudies@cua.edu for assistance.

The Writing Center

The Catholic University Writing Center provides support services to students at all stages of the writing process. The Writing Center strongly recommends that you contact them to make an appointment and speak with one of their trained consultants. Walk-ins are welcome on a space-available basis.

Catholic University Academic and Research Computing Resources

The Office of Technology Services offers a wide range of services for graduate students. Technology Services issues a computer account to all faculty, staff, and students, provides students, faculty, and staff with an extensive computer education and training program, and supports all technology classrooms and computing areas on campus. A general computing area in Leahy Hall, with both Windows and Apple machines, is open twenty-four hours a day during the semesters.

Using an Independent Copy Editor

The formatting review conducted by the Office of Graduate Studies points out errors in the formatting of your dissertation and shows places where changes, revisions, and edits are needed to bring the dissertation into conformity with the guidelines of this handbook. The Office of Graduate Studies does not make the necessary edits to your dissertation and is not available to do so. In those cases where you are not able to make the edits required by the Office of Graduate Studies, you may need to hire an independent copy editor.

Please consider the following when dealing with copy editors.

- Is the copy editor familiar with foreign expressions, equations, formatting tables and charts, etc., that you use in the dissertation?
- Will you already have properly formatted the final draft, or is the copy editor responsible for following Catholic University and discipline-specific formatting guidelines?
- May the copy editor correct minor grammatical and spelling errors?
- Will the copy editor proofread the finished work? (Of course, it is your responsibility to do the final proofreading, but the copy editor should proofread for obvious typographical errors.)
- After agreeing with the copy editor on a deadline for completion of the dissertation, what will be the penalty for not meeting the deadline?

Always be aware that prices quoted per page will likely be affected when using foreign words, equations, or complicated tables and charts.

You should be sure to secure a copy editor well in advance of deposit deadlines.

Whether or not you have already formatted the draft, give the copy editor a copy of the Catholic University formatting guidelines as well as any discipline-specific formatting guidelines you may be using. Emphasize the importance of following these guidelines.

The Copyright

The Office of General Counsel of The Catholic University of America has prepared an information sheet on the issues involved in the copyright of your dissertation and registering your copyright with the U.S. Copyright Office of the Library of Congress. It is important that you read this document prior to making the decision whether to register your copyright with the U.S. Copyright Office. You can also access extensive information on your copyright at the websites of the Office of General Counsel and ProQuest.

Ecclesiastical Imprimatur

For dissertations in canon law, sacred theology, or philosophy, an ecclesiastical imprimatur is generally not necessary. However, if you are a candidate in an ecclesiastical degree program, you should consult with your major professor or the dean of your school regarding the ecclesiastical imprimatur.

Artificial Intelligence Usage in Doctoral Dissertations, Evidence-Based Projects, Treatises, and Compositions

Doctoral students should follow the AI usage policies and guidelines of their academic unit as well as the Generative AI Guidelines of the University. Any substantial and/or editorial usage of AI must be disclosed in the text of the work. A substantial usage of AI includes, but is not limited to, the use of AI to generate text or data, create images or translations, or analyze findings. The disclosure should include what AI tool was used and toward what purpose. It is also important to indicate which version(s) of an AI tool were used. Appropriate locations for the disclosure could include a research methodology section or the introduction. An editorial use of AI, such as proofreading, fixing grammar or spelling, or stylistic suggestions, can be disclosed in the acknowledgements section rather than the body of the work, if preferred. All AI disclosures, including any editorial use, should be given to the committee prior to their certification that the student is ready for his or her defense. Failure to disclose AI usage will be handled under the Academic Dishonesty Policy. Incidental or accidental use of AI, such as AI summaries that are generated in Google searches, do not need to be disclosed.

The Elements of Your Dissertation

Preliminary Pages

Title Page

The Title of the Dissertation

Your title must be exactly the same one as submitted on your dissertation proposal. If you have made any changes to the title, you must submit a Request for Change in Doctoral Dissertation Title prior to your deposit date.

This is not the place for any creative efforts — special fonts, spacing, sizing, boldface or italic type, etc. Do not place the title in all capital letters.

Your Name

You must use your “name of record” on the title page. This is your official name as recorded by the Office of Enrollment Services. You may not include job titles or organizational affiliations (your diocese, your military unit, your employer, etc.). For clergy and religious, the titles “Rev.,” “Sr.,” or “Br.” are acceptable, while “Fr.” is not acceptable. Although you may have been sponsored and supported in your studies, your dissertation is your own work for which you are solely responsible. You may recognize sponsors in an acknowledgement or dedication.

The Copyright Symbol ©

Copyright privileges vest with you as author immediately upon creation of your dissertation, whether or not you include the © symbol on your title page, and whether or not you register your copyright with the U.S. Copyright Office of the Library of Congress. You must decide whether to place the © symbol on your title page.

The Year

The year on the title page of your dissertation is the year (no day or month) in which your dissertation will be published. This is also the year in which you graduate, and your copyright takes effect. For fall graduates, this means the year on your title page must be the following year as your degree is conferred in January.

Music Compositions for the Degree Doctor of Musical Arts

A dissertation submitted as a requirement for the D.M.A. degree comprising musical compositions will have a summary title page and separate title pages for each of the compositions.

Abstract

You are required to write an abstract of your dissertation. The abstract must be written in English, even if your dissertation is written in a foreign language. It must contain no special characters or any text written in a non-Roman alphabet. The text of the abstract must be double-spaced, and must provide a concise summary of the following information:

- A statement of the problem,
- A description of the research procedure or method,
- An explanation of the results of the research,
- A summary of your conclusions.

Since the abstract is an important summary of your work and is the basis upon which scholars may decide to read the dissertation, you must exercise great care in preparing the text. Remember, when placing your name of record at the top of the abstract, include the abbreviation of the degree you will receive upon graduating immediately after your name.

ProQuest does not place a word limit on the abstract, as that constrains the student's ability to describe their research in a section that is accessible to search engines, and therefore would constrain potential exposure of the work. However, ProQuest does publish print indexes that include citations and abstracts of the dissertations it publishes. These print indexes require limits of 350 words for doctoral dissertations. Additionally, ProQuest print indexes allow only text to be included in the abstract. In the editorial process for printing doctoral dissertations, ProQuest will truncate the abstract if it exceeds the 350-word limit and will remove any non-text content. Therefore, you may wish to limit the length of the abstract to 350 words if this concerns you. The abstract as you submit it, no matter the word count, will NOT be altered in your published dissertation.

Students often use the same text for both their abstract and the dissertation brochure published by their school prior to the oral defense. Please consult with your school concerning this possibility.

Place the abstract directly behind the title page, but do not number it. For further reference, please see Pagination.

Signature (Approval) Page

Your dissertation must have a signature (approval) page signed by the committee of your major professor and readers. You are responsible for properly formatting this page and obtaining the necessary signatures. The Office of Graduate Studies cannot assume responsibility for obtaining signatures.

You must prepare the signature page, following the formatting guidelines in the Appendix below and take it with you to your oral defense. Although the committee may ask you to make minor corrections to your dissertation following your defense, this usually does not prevent committee members from signing the dissertation signature page. If this is not possible, please arrange to get the signature page to all members of your committee for completion.

Number the signature page at the bottom center of the page with the lower-case Roman numeral “ii”. For further reference, please see Pagination.

Acknowledgements

Your dissertation should have an Acknowledgements page where you credit those who have contributed to your work. Readers who gave you comments on your dissertation, and those who helped with editing, are among the people who should be mentioned.

Optional Preliminary Pages

You may include a dedication, an epigraph, a list of illustrations, a list of tables, a list of abbreviations (may alternately appear in the end matter), a foreword, or a preface in the front matter of your dissertation.

For further reference, please see Pagination on the order of appearance and pagination of these optional preliminaries.

Body of Text

Introduction

An introduction is optional. If you choose to include it, please follow your discipline-specific guidelines in deciding whether to make the introduction an independent section or to consider it formally as your first chapter. In either case, the introduction is the equivalent of a first chapter of your text and will be numbered accordingly.

Notes/Footnotes

Footnotes are strongly preferred over chapter endnotes. A reader of a microfilm or PDF copy of your dissertation will have considerably greater access to information by including footnotes on each page. You must number footnotes consecutively throughout the entire paper. However, if there are more than 100 footnotes, number them consecutively by chapter.

Endnotes, when used, must appear at the end of each chapter — never at the end of the entire dissertation. As a general practice, endnotes must be the same size and font type as the body of text. However, you may use a slightly smaller font size in footnotes. In no case can the font size be less than 10 point. Since reprinting the dissertation from microfilm reduces the size of the print, smaller font sizes easily become illegible.

Refer to the appropriate style manual of your discipline for proper notation and reference format. For further reference, please see Typeface.

Illustrative Materials

Illustrative materials include photographs, charts, graphs, tables, prints, maps, reproductions, renderings, hand-drawn items, etc. You may include illustrative materials either in the body of the text or in an appendix. If included in the text, the materials must be inserted as close as possible to their first reference in the text. The explanation of the illustrative material must precede the item, and the label must follow the illustrative material. If you include the materials in an appendix, the explanation must also precede the item.

Alignment of Page Numbers

Whether or not the illustrative material is placed in the dissertation in portrait or landscape format, the pagination must follow the alignment rules established for the rest of the dissertation. For further reference, please see Pagination.

Charts and Graphs

When designing your charts and graphs, keep in mind that when they are reproduced from the microfilm, they will be reduced in size. The charts and graphs may be in color.

Photographs

If you include photographs, they must be of excellent quality. If in color, they must have been produced using a color process producing sharp images and brilliant, long-lasting color.

Reproductions

Use only excellent quality reproductions. Remember, the item will lose definition in the filming and reducing process, easily becoming illegible.

End Matter

Optional End Matter

Optional end matter may include an appendix or appendices, a glossary, a list of abbreviations (which may also appear with the preliminary pages) and addenda.

Letters of Permission

In the event you are including in your dissertation material that does not fall in the “fair use” category, you must request permission from the holder of the copyright to include the materials. For information on “fair use” and an example of a letter requesting permission to use the material, please visit the Office of General Counsel website. If you have requested permission from other authors or publishers to use material in your dissertation, you must include the letters of permission in your dissertation. Place such letters, separately labeled in an Appendix, at the rear of the dissertation.

Bibliography

Consult your department or school and the appropriate style manual for instructions on the discipline-specific formatting of the different types of references in your bibliography.

Preparing Your Dissertation

Typeface

The following standard printing fonts are acceptable: Cambria, Century Schoolbook, Garamond, Georgia, Minion Pro, Palatino, Times New Roman and their derivatives. The text of the dissertation must be printed with a 12-point font size. It is permissible to mix typefaces and fonts to give the finished product a professional appearance, for example using bold typeface or a larger font in titles. It is important, however, that your style elements be consistent throughout the dissertation. It is recommended that the text font and the page number font are the same.

Use either underlining or italics to emphasize text. Do not use bold typeface for emphasis since such typeface may not be clearly discernible on microfilm or reprints from microfilm. Do not mix underlining and italics for emphasis — one system must be used consistently throughout the paper.

You may use proportional spacing, as well as right-margin justification, as long as you use hyphenation appropriately. Control carefully for orphan and widow lines and headings. An orphan line is the first line of a paragraph that is the last line on a page. A widow line is the last line of a paragraph that is the first line on the next page. These look awkward because the bulk of the paragraph is on another page.

As a general practice, endnotes must be the same size and font type as the body of text. However, you may use a slightly smaller font size in footnotes. In no case can the font size be less than 10 point. Since reprinting the dissertation from microfilm reduces the size of the print, smaller font sizes can easily become illegible.

Alignment

The text must appear on the paper so that the left-hand margin of the text runs along the 11-inch length of the paper and 8.5 inches represents the width of the top and bottom of the paper.

Margins

All margins must be one inch wide.

Line Spacing

Double-space the text uniformly throughout the dissertation, except for footnotes, quotations, etc. Refer to Turabian, A Manual for Writers of Term Papers, Theses, and Dissertations or to your discipline's style manual for proper spacing instructions.

Pagination

Every page of the dissertation following the abstract must carry a number. Preliminary pages must be numbered in lower case Roman numerals starting with the signature page as “ii”. The text must be numbered in Arabic numerals, which continue consecutively throughout the remainder of the paper, including end matter.

All preliminary page numbers must be centered at the bottom of the page. Additionally, all end matter, that is every page after the main text, including appendices and bibliography, must be paginated at center bottom throughout.

All text page numbers can either be centered at the top of the page, or appear in the upper right-hand corner, with the exception of those pages carrying a major heading, such as the first page of a chapter, in which case the number must be centered at the bottom of the page. Page numbers must be placed within the header/footer. Even if charts, illustrative materials, etc., are inserted in the dissertation in landscape format, the page numbers must appear on the page and be consistent with all other pages of text in portrait format.

Manuscript-Style Dissertations

For doctoral students in certain disciplines, as approved by the dean (and department chair where applicable), an alternative dissertation style may be accepted. With written approval of the doctoral committee members, materials that have been prepared for submission to a peer-reviewed scholarly journal, or that have been accepted for publication in a peer-reviewed scholarly journal, may be submitted as a manuscript-style option instead of the default monograph-style dissertation.

The manuscript-style dissertation must contain an introductory chapter that explains the overall problem being investigated and the structure of how the various manuscript chapters relate to each other. It must further contain a concluding chapter that explains the contribution to the body of knowledge of each manuscript chapter individually and establishes the coherence of the entire dissertation.

All manuscripts that constitute chapters of a manuscript-style dissertation must have been created substantially during your doctoral studies at The Catholic University of America and must have been authored primarily by you (i.e. as sole author or lead author). For manuscripts with multiple authors, the dissertation director shall submit a memorandum to the Senior Vice Provost and Dean of Graduate Studies that quantifies the amounts of contribution by the candidate and all other co-authors, and the acknowledgement page must explain their contribution to the specific manuscript chapter. Co-authorship by doctoral committee members, fellow students, or external faculty or professionals is permitted.

The contents of a manuscript-style dissertation must be comparable in breadth and depth to a monograph-style dissertation. Before each manuscript chapter, you must provide a separate page with the complete current citation of that manuscript and a statement with one of the following options indicated:

- This manuscript has been prepared for submission to a peer-reviewed journal;
- This manuscript has been submitted for review to a peer-reviewed journal with a written request to retain the ability to include this manuscript in this dissertation;
- This manuscript has been accepted for publication by a peer-reviewed journal and its signed permission form to include this manuscript in this dissertation is included in the appendix.

All of the formatting guidelines listed in this Handbook are still applicable for manuscript-style dissertations.

Reviewing Your Dissertation

To ensure that the deposit of your dissertation goes smoothly, you must send your dissertation to cua-graduatestudies@cua.edu no later than two weeks prior to the oral examination/doctoral defense. The formatting review is conducted through email using the final PDF version of your complete dissertation.

You must use your official Catholic University email address when contacting the Office of Graduate Studies, as that Gmail address has added capacity for large files and allows for the easy tracking of correspondence with the administrator.

The person designated by the Office of Graduate Studies to conduct the formatting review will give you directions on any necessary formatting changes to your dissertation. The reviewer does not work as a copy editor and will not make changes to your dissertation on your behalf. It will be your responsibility to make any changes to your dissertation required from the formatting review or from your committee after the successful oral examination/doctoral defense, and to obtain the signatures of the members of the committee on the dissertation's signature page.

Once your dissertation's formatting has been approved, you will be given a Permission to Publish form, which must be brought with you to the oral examination/doctoral defense.

You will also be given the ETD@CUA Submission Licensing Statement to complete. This document gives you the choice of what license (worldwide or local) you will grant the University in publishing your dissertation through ProQuest and The Catholic University of America Dissertations and Theses Digital Collection Depository at the Mullen Library. For more detailed information on the licensing differences, visit the Office of Graduate Studies website.

Please note that individual schools may require you to submit your final dissertation to your dissertation committee by a deadline earlier than the formatting review deadline of two weeks before the oral examination/doctoral defense date. Please consult with your school dean's office concerning your school's submission requirements.

The Oral Examination/Doctoral Defense

After the successful oral examination/doctoral defense, your major professor and dean must sign the Permission to Publish form. This form, along with the dissertation's title page, abstract, and signed signature page, will need to be uploaded to this Google Form.

Uploading Your Dissertation to ProQuest

After you have received formatting approval, you must submit your final dissertation online through ProQuest. You are responsible for setting up an account with ProQuest, paying your ProQuest fees, and submitting your dissertation by the deposit deadline. Please note: the ProQuest fees include the mandatory purchase of a microfilm copy for the Mullen Library. You can also let ProQuest obtain a formal copyright for your dissertation for an additional fee.

The deadline for deposit published in the Academic Calendar specifies the last date upon which a dissertation may be deposited in order for you to be able to graduate on the next graduation date.

Personal Bound Copies of the Dissertation

The University does not provide personal binding services for students. You may opt to purchase hard- or soft-cover copies from ProQuest, or you may order bound copies from a commercial bindery.

The Final Doctoral Deposit

At the end of this handbook you will find a doctoral deposit checklist outlining the steps to follow in preparing to submit the dissertation online to ProQuest, as well as listing the documents and fees you must submit before the Office of Graduate Studies can accept your submission.

The deadlines for final online submission and deposit of the dissertation materials cannot be extended.

Please note that the Office of Graduate Studies cannot accept for submission any dissertation if the necessary fees and documentation have not been completed and submitted. Also, the Office of Graduate Studies is unable to obtain any necessary signatures or complete any required documentation on your behalf.

Deposit Receipt

Once the Office of Graduate Studies has completed the dissertation deposit process and certified your dissertation as approved in ProQuest, a receipt will be issued. A copy of this receipt will be sent to you and the graduate coordinator of your school as proof of deposit which is a prerequisite for graduation from your program.

What Happens to Your Dissertation after Deposit?

After your deposit and graduation from the University, the Office of Graduate Studies will approve your dissertation for publishing with ProQuest. It usually takes ProQuest six to eight weeks after your graduation to microfilm the dissertation and post the dissertation information on their website.

Once ProQuest has filmed your dissertation, they will send a copy of the microfilm to the Office of Graduate Studies, which will send the microfilm to the American Catholic History Research Center and University Archives for cataloging and storage.

The Catholic University of America Open Access Policy

ProQuest works in conjunction with The Catholic University of America Dissertations and Theses Digital Collection Depository at the Mullen Library. Therefore, the choice of license you made when you submitted the ETD@CUA Submission Licensing Statement with the Office of Graduate Studies guides the online publication of your dissertation. Your dissertation will be made available for viewing by the public only according to your directions as indicated on the licensing statement.

If you have any further questions, please visit the Office of Graduate Studies website or email cua-graduatestudies@cua.edu.

Graduation

All candidates for graduation must apply for graduation through Cardinal Students or with the Office of Enrollment Services by the deadline stated in the Academic Calendar for the semester in which they intend to graduate.

If you are graduating at the May commencement exercises, you will receive your diploma at that time. If you are graduating in August or January, your diploma will be mailed to you and you must ensure that your mailing address in Cardinal Students is updated and correct.

No matter when you are graduating in the academic year (summer, fall, or spring semester), you are invited to attend the May commencement exercises as a graduate of that academic year.

Final Doctoral Deposit Process

Preparing to Deposit Your Doctoral Dissertation

Your dissertation must be formatted correctly and must be accompanied by all necessary documentation and all necessary signatures. The Office of Graduate Studies will not accept any dissertation for deposit that does not meet the above criteria.

Dissertation Defense Checklist

- ✓ Check your dissertation page by page for formatting, numbering, printing errors, missing or misplaced pages, etc.
- ✓ Make sure that the title of your dissertation corresponds exactly to the title on your Doctoral Dissertation Topic and Committee: Request for Approval form or on any subsequent Request for Change in Doctoral Dissertation Title form you submitted.
- ✓ No later than two weeks prior to your scheduled oral examination/doctoral defense, start the formatting review process with the Office of Graduate Studies by sending the entire dissertation as one PDF file.
- ✓ When the reviewer returns the dissertation to you for editing, make all necessary formatting corrections, and resend it to the reviewer.
- ✓ After obtaining approval from the reviewer, print out the title page, abstract, and signature page and bring them with you to the oral examination/doctoral defense.
- ✓ At your oral examination/doctoral defense, obtain all necessary signatures on the Permission to Publish form and on your dissertation's signature page).
- ✓ Carefully complete all documentation remembering to keep one set of copies for your files.
- ✓ Submit documents to the Office of Graduate Studies per the instructions email sent to you with your formatting approval.

Dissertation Deposit Checklist

By the end of the deposit process, the following items will have been submitted to the Office of Graduate Studies:
